We were given two eyes to see the physical world. To see the abstract meaning behind it (the soul), a third eye is required. This third eye is a level of consciousness based on knowledge. Through the second birth, the Messiah gives us this awareness so that we can focus on serving and adding value. And let this become our way of life.

According to the Messiah's understanding, true greatness does not lie in the outer world, but in the inner world. Those who discover this greatness within themselves not only achieve personal integrity, but also continue to grow in the outer world. They experience the excitement and fulfilment of sincerely and humbly fulfilling their duties and tasks.

The Messiah is a wisdom that teaches the discovery of true greatness in the inner world; it is a lesson, a teaching, a light, a love, a responsibility, a wisdom.

Above all, however, he is "the life, the way and the truth" (John 14:6).

The essential thing is that we desire this knowledge, this life, this way and this truth. Do we desire it?

The crucial question is whether we want to learn this lesson. Do we want to learn it?

The crucial question is whether we want to internalise this lesson. Are we looking for the methods to internalise it?

Do we have the will to organise our social and administrative life in accordance with the obligations of this teaching?

Are we ready to bear the honour of being enlightened by the light of this wisdom?

Can we dare to live this love, untainted by selfishness, and express it unconditionally in our lives?

Do we accept the sincerity and responsibility to walk this path?

Are we ready to bear the discipline of this responsibility with compassionate awareness?

Can we lead ourselves and our lives according to the demands of this wisdom?

No one should deceive themselves or try to deceive others. The answers to these questions are the be-all and end-all.

For when the Messiah is the truth of our life, our path and our reality, we begin to see the unseen and recognise what has gone unnoticed until now.

Then we not only free ourselves from enslaving desires and passions, but we truly awaken. Real awakening is the transition from mental slavery to freedom and responsibility. It means living life consciously and knowingly. It means that we orientate our beliefs, thoughts and actions not only to save ourselves, but to serve the holistic life, the whole.

Do not forget that! Any spiritual support that has value and makes a contribution returns as a great blessing and greatness to the one who offers it. A salute to those who give meaning to life with their duties and understanding and who touch other hearts with their courageous spirit.
